FIFA fans can start building their Ultimate Team squads for FIFA 18 now thanks to the EA Sports web app. Ultimate Team is FIFA's most popular game mode - and, in fact, the most popular way of any football in the market - and has become extremely competitive in recent years, with competing players vying for valuable items and coins and colliding in matches. For those who are not familiar with the Ultimate Team, the feature allows you to collect players from all over the world and teams that can be used in online FIFA games and tournaments. Players can be obtained by spending FIFA coins to open packages or trade in a huge market of buyers and sellers of individual items. For any serious Ultimate Team players, logging into the web app has become an integral part of getting a start in the competition and tweaking yourself for instant success on release day. Here's our complete guide to using the web app and making the most of the possibilities. The FIFA web app is an online app that allows FIFA players to manage their Ultimate Team away from their console. Users can access their squads, consumables and club items, as well as FUT shop, transfer market and leaders. In fact, you can buy and sell players, open packages and manage your squad without having to switch to PS4 or Xbox. You will have to pick up a controller to actually play games with your teams of course. The web application has become particularly popular because it is launched shortly before fifa comes out every year, allowing players to get a start in the Ultimate Team market. EA Sports often roll out daily gifts for those who sign up, including return player packages and kick-off packages. Access to the web app can be accessed on the EA Sports website here. You will need to subscribe to an EA account that is linked to your FIFA profile, which can then be used to log in and access your Ultimate Team commands. The web app is now live, 36 hours before the game becomes available to EA Access and Origin users. The full release of FIFA 18 will be released in 10 days, Friday, September 29. You can get your hands on the game earlier by pre-ordering special editions of Ronaldo or Icon, however, which will be available for play on Tuesday, September 26. The web app is designed to use desktops and laptops, but EA Sports has also released a companion app for smartphones to ensure you can access the Ultimate Team on the go. You can download this for iPhone and Android now by following these links on your device. You can do almost anything on the companion app, from managing your team and completing squad-building challenges to making bets in the transfer market and accessing the FUT store to open packages and other items. Just log in with the same credentials that you use in a web application and you'll be good to go. Ultimate Team has some great tips in terms of the maximum part of the box in which the FIFA 18 web app is available before the full game is released. One of their most important bits of advice is to resist the urge to open expensive packages and instead collect as many coins as you can focus on trading. Shop for bargain items you can flip for quick profits and make investing in players and consumables that will rise in value when the game comes out. Creating a good bank balance and collecting assets on release day can give you a huge start in the competition. As fun as opening packages, coins are hard to find during time the initial window and must be cherished and used wisely. The only exception is the strategy of buying 400-coin bronze packages and selling content for the total profit with which some players have been successful. Aside from that, make sure you are online to open all daily gifts and sell anything in the return of users and starter packages that are unlikely to rise in price on the day of release and beyond. Ultimate Team also say that rare silver players - look for moves skills, weak foot rating and speed - can often be picked up cheaper than usual during the webstart period, so watch out for potential purchases there. FIFA 18 will be released worldwide on Friday, September 29. There are two ways, however, to get your hands on the game early. First, pre-order the Ronaldo Edition or Icon Edition, priced at 79.99 pounds ($79.99) and 89.99 pounds ($89.99) respectively and packaged with The Ultimate Team content bonus. They will be available for the game on Tuesday, September 26, which is in line with the agility of the advisor for going live on late Tuesday in September. If that's not soon enough, you'll need to sign up for EA Access (Xbox One) or Origin Access (PC), both of which cost either 3.99 pounds ($4.99) per month or 19.99 pounds ($29.99) per year. This will help you 10 hours of trial game time from Thursday, September 21. If you're a PlayStation 4 player, the September 26 date is the earliest you can play.
